

Trainer Information Sheet

Mel's initial career was to be in the world of music, studying the subject at the University of Lancaster in the UK, principally in teaching. However, after a change of plan, he decided that the future (back in the late 70's) was in Information Technology.

After working first for local government, he decided to go freelance, getting involved with early large-scale IT projects for companies including EDS, Hewlett Packard, and several UK government departments: Her Majesties Revenue & customs and the Department for Work and Pensions. As well as software development, Mel gave presentations and lectures on various subjects, plus mentoring new members of staff.

Mel started teaching at the Language Centre, Todi, in 2014. He has taught students with many levels of ability, from beginners who are learning just for fun, to those aiming for qualifications such as IELTS and Cambridge certificates. Whether it's on a one-to-one basis, or a large group, Mel aim always is to make learning English exciting, stimulating, but above all, enjoyable.
